ABOUT THE TRAINING

Fish seed production is the foundational backbone of aquaculture industry. It involves controlled breeding and hatchery management of economically important aquatic animals to ensure continuous production and supply of healthy offspring for stocking. Generally, the seed production of marine aquatic organisms requires sophisticated brooder maintenance and hatchery systems, nutritional and environmental conditioning, stringent control of water quality, biosecurity, specialized care and feeding for the highly sensitive larvae, live feed management and advanced technical expertise. In this context, this training aims to impart scientific knowledge on marine fish seed production to the interested stakeholders for enabling future mariculture expansion and intensification.
